Food Value Chains

Resources represent an asset or wealth that can be used by countries, organizations, communities or people to produce benefits. It is a broad concept and many definitions exist, but in general, we can classify resources as natural, human and/or capital resources. The following are some of the resources used to produce food:

- Energy
- Air
- Labor
- Money
- Water
- Land

In a food value chain, resources are used to grow, process, handle, and distribute food so that it functions effectively: to deliver safe and nutritious food to people.
