EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

- In line with guidance from the 123rd Session of Council (ref. CL 123/REP, para 73), Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) Reports are submitted to the Finance and Programme Committees together with the comments of the Director-General (and CEB comments, if available) for review and comments.

GUIDANCE SOUGHT FROM THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

- The Finance Committee is invited to take note of the information provided in the attached JIU report, and submit any comments it may wish to make to the Council.

COUNCIL

Hundred and Forty-first Session

Rome, 11-15 April 2011

Ethics in the United Nations system organizations (JIU/REP/2010/3)

1. This JIU Report is accompanied by comments of the Director-General. The Director-General is in general agreement with the extensive observations made by the United Nations system Chief Executives Board (CEB) for Coordination (UNGA document A/65/345/Add.1). These observations are an expression of the interest that the organizations attach to ethic issues throughout the United Nations system. A few comments of the Director-General, reflecting the particular situation of FAO, are presented below.

Comments from the Director-General of FAO

Recommendation 6: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to apply term limits to the appointment of the head of the ethics office, which should be a non-renewable appointment of seven years, or no more than two consecutive appointments of four or five years, with no possibility of re-employment by the same organization.

2. The Director-General supports this recommendation as applied to the Ethics Officer which would be in keeping with the Ethics Officer's independent and neutral function, his or her accessibility to confidential documents and would protect the Officer from "undue influence while avoiding the risks inherent in long-term tenure". However, as recalled by the CEB, insofar as current incumbents may have been recruited without any assignment limitation, there might be a need for flexibility in the implementation of this recommendation.

Recommendation 7: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office submits an annual report, or a summary thereof, unchanged by the executive head, directly to the legislative body, together with any comments of the executive head thereon.

3. The Conference of FAO decided, through Resolution 1/2008, that an Ethics Committee should be established within the Organization, the statutes of which have been under review by the relevant governing bodies. The Ethics Committee - which would have general responsibility for the implementation of the Ethics Programme in the Organization - should submit an annual report to the Director-General, the Finance Committee and the Committee on Constitutional and Legal Matters (CCLM). The report from the Ethics Committee could include a summary of all relevant cases or matters included in the report on the activities of the Ethics Officer.

Recommendation 8: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office has informal access to the legislative bodies which is enshrined in writing.

4. The Director-General concurs with the views of the CEB that any concerns of head of the Ethics Office could be brought to the attention of the Ethics Committee and an annual report of the Ethics Committee is to be referred to the Director-General, the Finance Committee and the CCLM.

Recommendation 9: The executive heads of United Nations system organizations that have not already done so should expedite the process of seeking membership for their respective organizations in the United Nations Ethics Committee.

5. The Director-General observes that the Conference FAO decided, through Resolution 1/2008, that an Ethics Committee should be established within FAO and, therefore, FAO would not be seeking membership of the United Nations Ethics Committee. However, the Ethics Officer is a member of the network of Ethics Offices of the organizations of the United Nations and takes an active part in all activities of the network.

Recommendation 12: In cases where a prima facie case of retaliation or threat of retaliation has been established by the organization's ethics office and the internal oversight office declines to undertake the investigation, the executive head, or the head of the ethics office, should refer the matter to the Joint Inspection Unit for investigation.

6. The Director-General concurs with the views of the CEB concerning this recommendation. In addition, he clarifies that the FAO Ethics Officer does not conduct investigations. The Office of the Inspector General (AUD) investigates allegations of fraud, unsatisfactory conduct, and other irregularities in the programmes and operations of the Organization. Existing mechanisms would therefore appear to be sufficient.

Recommendation 14: Executive heads should ensure that the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is a member of the senior management group and participates in all of its meetings, and should promulgate an administrative instrument to that effect.

7. The Director-General concurs in general with the views of the CEB, including on the fact that the term "senior management" varies across organizations and more clarity on the part of the JIU regarding the appropriate level of participation would have strengthened this recommendation. The Director-General concurs with the CEB regarding the desirability of a pragmatic approach towards the implementation of this recommendation, whereby the Ethics Officer could participate in particular meetings on a when-as-required basis.

Recommendation 16: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to file a financial disclosure statement, which should be reviewed in the same manner as all other staff members who are required to file such statements.

8. The Director-General agrees with this recommendation, as is the case with the CEB, and wishes to recall that a process aimed at implementing a financial disclosure programme in FAO is under way.

Recommendation 17: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for an internal mechanism to be established that would set out the modalities for the ethics office and/or the internal oversight service to investigate allegations brought against the executive head of the organization, including reporting the outcome of the investigation directly to the respective legislative body.

9. The Director-General concurs with the view of the CEB that this recommendation is directed to the governing bodies. In this connection, the Conference of FAO has decided, through Resolution 1/2008 approving the Immediate Plan of Action (IPA) for FAO Renewal that "The External Auditor will assume responsibility for audit of the immediate office of the Director-General in addition to the regular audits carried out by the Inspector-General". The Council of FAO is responsible for the implementation of this decision.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Ethics in the United Nations system JIU/REP/2010/3

The present review followed up on an earlier JIU report on oversight lacunae in United Nations system organizations in order to determine progress, lessons learned, and best practices in establishing and implementing the ethics function throughout the United Nations System. The objective of the review was to provide recommendations leading to a fully operational ethics function in each of the organizations of the United Nations System designed to ensure an understanding by all staff of minimum acceptable standards of behaviour.

Main findings and conclusions

As with the earlier report on oversight lacunae, the Inspectors reviewed the ethics function of participating organizations in relation to key components considered essential for an effective ethics function. These key components are presented as JIU suggested standards. The Inspectors analysed information gathered for each organization against the JIU suggested standards, and the recommendations of the report are derived from their findings.

The ethics function

- Staff members have access to various entities to help resolve problems in their professional lives. These activities are expanding and are funded at the expense of mainstream programme activities. A hope for the ethics function is that it may prevent issues from becoming problems needing conflict resolution. As ethics offices become entrenched in the organizations, resources devoted to conflict management would decline.
- A model ethics office has a mandate, clear goals, vision, infrastructure and funding. In the view of the Inspectors, the United Nations Ethics Office provides the benchmark for all ethics offices in United Nations system organizations.

Establishment of the ethics function

- The present review has shown that, while there has been progress in establishing the ethics function, particularly in the United Nations and the funds and programmes, little has been achieved in many of the agencies.
- For the most part, proposals for the establishment of a formal ethics function have been put forward by the executive heads for the consideration of the legislative bodies, often in the context of programme budget proposals.
- For those organizations too small to establish separate ethics offices, and to avoid the conflict of interest inherent in some dual-function arrangements, a joint or shared ethics office could be established. Another option could be in-sourcing arrangements whereby one United Nations system organization provides ethics services for another.

- For the most part, the terms of reference promulgated for the ethics function by the organizations conform to the JIU suggested standards. However, a major concern of the Inspectors is that in some organizations this amounts to no more than a paper exercise.
- Budget data demonstrate the low level of commitment to the ethics function in many of the agencies, with zero funding in 2010-2011 in ICAO, WMO, IMO, WIPO and UNWTO. The funding levels in ILO and IAEA are minimal in relation to the size of these organizations.
- Some 38 per cent of the total planned budget of United Nations system organizations for ethics activities in 2010-2011 will fund posts of heads of ethics offices at the D-2, D-1 or P-5 levels. The Inspectors believe there may be some scope for rationalization through joint services or in-sourcing arrangements.

Heads of ethics offices

- The United Nations, the funds and programmes, FAO, ITU and UNESCO have all met the JIU suggested standard by appointing heads of ethics offices at a senior level, but there was no dedicated post for the ethics function at any level in any of the other agencies.
- The creation of dual-function posts with an ethics component in some of the larger agencies is not a satisfactory response to the JIU recommendation of 2006 and shows a lack of commitment to the ethics function. In establishing dual-function posts, the smaller agencies must avoid creating conflicts of interest.
- To ensure that only the best professionals are appointed to head the ethics function in United Nations system organizations, there should be competitive recruitment open to both internal and external candidates on an equal basis. A professional background in ethics – in terms both of qualifications and experience – should be a requirement for the post, and this should be made clear in the vacancy announcement.
- The Inspectors consider that the ethics function cannot fully achieve its objectives without the support of the staffs of the organizations. It is crucial therefore that staff representatives are closely involved in the selection processes for the head of ethics office in their respective organizations.

Independence of the ethics function

- To ensure the independence of the ethics function, rigorous conditions governing the appointment of heads of ethics offices must be in place, including term limits. Term limits support the independence of the function by protecting the incumbent from undue influence while avoiding the risks inherent in long-term tenure. The Inspectors found that the majority of the organizations that had appointed heads of ethics offices had not applied term limits. Moreover, in those that had a requirement for term limits, it was not being strictly observed.
- The head of the ethics office must report directly to the executive head, and must also have both formal and informal access to the legislative bodies to ensure that the independence of the function is not circumscribed by the executive head. The Inspector found, however, that the organizations are very far from the required standards for reporting.

Ethics office responsibilities

- The Inspectors emphasize the importance of harmonizing ethics standards across United Nations system organizations and consider that the United Nations Ethics Committee is an important forum in this regard. It would however benefit the work of the Committee if all United Nations system organizations participated as members.
- Training, education and outreach activities are critical activities as they have the potential to reach all staff members of the organizations. Only the United Nations, UNDP, UNFPA, UNHCR and UNESCO currently have mandatory training for all staff. The Inspectors strongly believe that ethics training should be mandatory for all staff and that there should be mandatory refresher courses on a regular basis. The executive heads should take the lead in this regard. The executive heads should also undertake biennial staff surveys on integrity awareness and publicize the results on the intranets of their respective organizations.
- Requests for ethics advice and guidance must be dealt with promptly and efficiently so that staff gain confidence in the services of the ethics office, but most offices did not have formal benchmarks in place. To ensure consistency in the advice given, there must be regular consultations among all organizational entities that may be called on to give ethics-related advice.
- For the most part, the modalities for receiving complaints of alleged retaliation under whistleblower protection policies, and handling of complaints by ethics offices, conform to JIU suggested standards in the United Nations and the funds and programmes, although there were sometimes delays in completing the preliminary review. In the specialized agencies and IAEA, whistleblower protection policies are largely absent, or only just being developed.
- In cases where a prima facie case of retaliation or threat of retaliation has been found by the organization's ethics office and the internal oversight office declines to undertake the investigation, the executive head or the head of the ethics office should refer the matter to the Joint Inspection Unit for investigation.
- In the United Nations and the funds and programmes, the ethics office administers the financial disclosure programme. In the absence of ethics offices in most of the agencies, other entities administer such financial disclosure programmes as exist. The Inspectors found that in most cases these amounted to no more than declarations or registers of interest by the staff concerned and that there was little or no review or verification of the information provided.
- The executive heads of those organizations that have not already done so should introduce a comprehensive financial disclosure policy as a matter of urgency, including review and verification by the respective ethics offices of the financial disclosure statements of all officials concerned.

Commitment to the ethics function

- The ethical health of the organizations will be strongly influenced by the behaviour of those at the top. Executive heads should recognize their own obligations in this regard and take steps to demonstrate a strong personal commitment to the ethics function, providing a “seat at the table” for the head of ethics, holding annual “town hall” meetings with a specific component on ethics, and filing their own financial disclosure statement.

- In each organization, an internal mechanism needs to be established to set out the modalities for the ethics office and/or the internal oversight service to investigate or review allegations brought against the executive head of the organization, including reporting the outcome of the investigation or review directly to the legislative body.
- The Inspectors believe it is a dual responsibility of Member States and executive heads to address the issues raised in this report. Member States should ensure adequate resources for the ethics function; at the same time, executive heads should be held accountable for setting the “tone at the top” and ensuring that the ethics function operates efficiently and effectively.

Recommendations for consideration by legislative organs

- The legislative bodies of the smaller organizations should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for providing the ethics function through either a joint ethics office established by a group of organizations on a cost-sharing basis or in-sourcing to the ethics office of another organization on a cost-sharing/cost-recovery basis.
- The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to apply term limits to the appointment of the head of the ethics office, which should be a non-renewable appointment of seven years, or no more than two consecutive appointments of four or five years, with no possibility of re-employment by the same organization.
- The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office submits an annual report, or a summary thereof, unchanged by the executive head, directly to the legislative body, together with any comments of the executive head thereon.
- The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office has informal access to the legislative bodies which is enshrined in writing.
- The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to file a financial disclosure statement, which should be reviewed in the same manner as for all other staff members who are required to file such statements.
- The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for an internal mechanism to be established that would set out the modalities for the ethics office and/or the internal oversight service to investigate or undertake reviews of allegations brought against the executive head of the organization, including reporting the outcome of the investigation or review directly to the respective legislative body.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. As part of its programme of work for 2009, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) conducted a review of ethics in the United Nations System. The review had been suggested by the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). As ethics and integrity are critical to the efficient and effective functioning and the credibility of an organization itself, the present review followed up on an earlier report of the JIU entitled "Oversight lacunae in the United Nations system" to determine progress, lessons learned, and best practices in establishing and implementing the ethics function throughout the United Nations System.¹

2. Unethical behaviour and corrupt practices on the part of a few continue to mar the work and reputation of United Nations system organizations. And while, regrettably, they may never be fully eliminated, the establishment of the ethics function can help to limit problems and foster a culture and atmosphere of integrity and accountability. Establishing the ethics function is not enough however; the implementation of the function, with the development and dissemination of policies and procedures with respect to the application of minimum acceptable standards of behaviour, is required. A necessary corollary is the understanding of and adherence to the principles and practices of ethical behaviour by all staff members (including executive heads), as well as consultants and contractors, elected officials and oversight bodies. This applies to everyone working in any capacity for the organization; no one is excluded or exempted.

3. The objective of the review was to provide recommendations leading to a fully operational ethics function in each of the organizations of the United Nations System designed to cultivate and nurture a culture of ethics, integrity and accountability and to ensure an understanding by all staff of minimum acceptable standards of behaviour.

4. The review covered the United Nations, its funds and programmes, the United Nations specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). In accordance with the internal standards and guidelines of JIU and its internal working procedures, the methodology followed in preparing this report included a preliminary review, questionnaires, interviews and in-depth analysis. Detailed questionnaires were sent to participating organizations. On the basis of the responses received, the Inspectors conducted interviews with officials of participating organizations and also sought the views of a number of other international organizations and private sector experts.

5. As with the earlier JIU report on oversight lacunae, the Inspectors reviewed the ethics function of participating organizations in relation to key components considered essential for an effective ethics function. In this report, these key components are presented as JIU suggested standards in text boxes in the report, which link to annexes that provide summaries of the information gathered for each participating organization. The Inspectors analysed this information against the JIU suggested standards, and the recommendations of the report are derived from their findings.

6. The JIU suggested standards were based on:

- Literature on ethics and integrity;
- Various reports submitted to the General Assembly and the legislative bodies of the respective organizations;

- Best practices in the ethics functions of United Nations system organizations;
- Discussions with ethics practitioners and other concerned officials in United Nations system organizations;
- Discussions with staff representatives within the organizations;
- Discussions with internationally renowned private sector experts in respect of practices within that sector.

7. In contrast with the earlier report, the Inspectors have not indicated whether the JIU suggested standards have been met by those organizations that have established the ethics function. The research revealed several instances where everything was in place, and as such would have indicated that the organization had fully or partially met the suggested standards. However, based on interviews and further research, the Inspectors concluded that in some organizations the ethics function amounted to no more than a paper exercise, which enabled the organization simply to “tick the box”. Issuing an administrative instrument is not sufficient for the implementation of the ethics function. Without a real commitment from executive heads and senior management, together with Member States, little can be achieved.

8. As is normal practice, comments from participating organizations on the draft report have been sought and taken into account in finalizing the report.

9. In accordance with article 11.2 of the JIU statute, this report has been finalized after consultation among the Inspectors so as to test its conclusions and recommendations against the collective wisdom of the Unit.

10. To facilitate the handling of the report and the implementation of its recommendations and the monitoring thereof, annex IX contains a table indicating whether the report is submitted to the organizations concerned for action or for information. The table identifies those recommendations relevant for each organization, specifying whether they require a decision by the organization’s legislative or governing body or can be acted upon by the organization’s executive head.

11. The Inspectors wish to express their appreciation to all who assisted them in the preparation of this report, and particularly to those who participated in the interviews and so willingly shared their knowledge and expertise.

II. THE ETHICS FUNCTION

12. The Charter of the United Nations states, in article 101, that “[the] paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity”. Professionalism, integrity and respect for diversity are the core values expected of the staff of the Organization.

13. Integrity can be defined as “moral uprightness” or “honesty”, and ethics as “moral principles”.² In an organizational context, ethics and integrity, broadly defined, “refer to a commitment to moral thought and action in all aspects of how an organization is governed and run”.³

14. The participating organizations were asked if the terms “integrity” and “ethics” were defined in their official documentation. For the most part, the organizations referred the Inspectors to the Charter of the United Nations, the “Standards of conduct for the international civil service” adopted by the International Civil Service Commission in 2001, and staff regulations and rules, as the guiding documents in such matters.

15. The organizations were also requested to distinguish between a code of conduct and a code of ethics. Some could see no distinction, while others saw a code of conduct as compliance based with related sanctions and a code of ethics as aspirational and preventative in nature.

16. There are a growing number of entities to which staff members have access when problems and issues arise, including staff counsellors, ombudspersons, mediators, arbitrators, human resources personnel, oversight offices and staff unions, with ethics offices the latest addition to this list. It is unfortunate that these activities are expanding and are funded at the expense of mainstream programme activities. A hope for the ethics function is that it may prevent issues from becoming problems needing conflict resolution. As ethics offices become entrenched in the organizations, resources devoted to conflict management would decline.

17. A key purpose of an ethics office is to foster a culture of ethics, integrity and accountability, thereby enhancing the trust in, and the credibility of, an organization, both internally and externally. The Inspectors believe that most staff members of the organizations maintain impeccable ethical standards in their professional and personal lives. It is regrettable therefore that the actions of a few have created the need for a formal ethics function in the organizations. At the same time, operating on an international scale, with the cultural differences that entails, can and does lead to ethical dilemmas which need to be addressed and resolved.

18. A model ethics office has a mandate, clear goals, vision, infrastructure and funding. It contributes to creating policies, carries out those policies, communicates about the policies and provides advice and guidance. In the view of the Inspectors, the United Nations Ethics Office provides the benchmark for all ethics offices in United Nations system organizations. This does not mean, nor does it imply, that improvements are not needed throughout the United Nations system.

III. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE ETHICS FUNCTION

19. In its 2006 report on oversight lacunae in the United Nations system, the JIU found that most of the organizations did not meet – or only partially met – the JIU suggested standards for the establishment of the ethics function.⁴ The present review has shown that, while there has been progress in establishing the ethics function, particularly in the United Nations and the funds and programmes, little has been achieved in many of the agencies (annexes I and II). For these organizations, the Inspectors reiterate the recommendation of the earlier report that the legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for the establishment of an ethics function with clear terms of reference, and the establishment of a post of ethics officer at the D-1/P-5 level, as appropriate, within the office of the executive head.⁵

20. JIU suggested standards for the establishment of the ethics function, relating to the mandate and terms of reference, are set out in box 1 below.

Box 1

Establishment of the ethics function

JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Ethics function established by a decision of the legislative body.
- (b) Terms of reference of ethics function to include:
 - (i) Development and dissemination of ethics standards;
 - (ii) Development and implementation of mandatory ethics training;
 - (iii) Provision of confidential ethics advice and guidance to all staff of the organization whatever their contractual status;
 - (iv) Administering the organization's policy for the protection of staff against retaliation for reporting misconduct and for cooperating with duly authorized audits or investigations (whistleblower protection policy);
 - (v) Administering the organization's financial disclosure programme.

21. For the most part, proposals for the establishment of a formal ethics function have been put forward by the executive heads for the consideration of the legislative bodies, often in the context of programme budget proposals (annex I). The first such initiative came from the previous Secretary-General when he proposed in 2005 the establishment of an independent ethics office in his annual report to the General Assembly on measures to strengthen accountability in the Secretariat.⁶ The General Assembly approved funding for the ethics office in the 2006-2007 budget, and endorsed its main responsibilities.

22. The establishment of ethics offices in the funds and programmes has been closely linked to that in the United Nations. Following General Assembly resolution 60/1, paragraph 161(d), the Secretary-General promulgated a bulletin, "United Nations system-wide application of ethics: separately administered organs and programmes", which has guided these organizations in setting up their own ethics offices.⁷ The legislative bodies of the funds and programmes all approved the creation of a senior level ethics officer post in their organizations' 2008-2009 programme budget decisions.

23. Among the specialized agencies, the legislative bodies have approved the creation of a senior ethics officer post through their programme budget decisions only in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). In the latter, the proposal for a new post of ethics officer came from a working group of the Council.

24. The earlier oversight lacunae report recognized that the size of an organization would be a factor in the establishment of the ethics function and suggested that in smaller organizations it could be a dual-function post.⁸ Several of the smaller organizations have indeed failed to establish the ethics function – the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), the International Maritime Organization (IMO), and the United Nations World Tourism Organization (UNWTO). But where dual-function arrangements have been set up, as in the Universal Postal Union (UPU) and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), problems have arisen with potential conflicts of interest and a lack of dedicated funding for the ethics component. Moreover, two of the larger organizations have unjustifiably adopted the dual-function model, namely IAEA and the International Labour Organization (ILO), with significant downside risks.

25. For those organizations too small to establish separate ethics offices, and to avoid the conflict of interest inherent in some dual-function arrangements, a joint or shared ethics office could be established. A single cost-shared ethics office for IMO, ITU, UPU, UNWTO, WIPO and WMO, for example, would give rise to economies of scale, with only one ethics office head at the D-1/P-5 level and other staffing savings. Another option could be in-sourcing arrangements whereby one United Nations system organization provides ethics services for another. In this regard, several specialized agencies have expressed their interest in having the United Nations Ethics Office deliver the ethics function for their agencies on a cost-sharing basis.⁹

26. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 1

The legislative bodies of the smaller organizations should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for providing the ethics function through either a joint ethics office established by a group of organizations on a cost-sharing basis or in-sourcing to the ethics office of another organization on a cost-sharing/cost-recovery basis.

⁸ JIU/REP/2006/2, para. 49.

⁹ A/64/316, para. 78.

A. Terms of reference of the ethics function

27. The terms of reference of the ethics offices of the United Nations and the funds and programmes all conform to the standards suggested in box 1 above. For the most part, the funds and programmes have followed the lead of the United Nations and adopted the terms of reference set out in the Secretary-General's bulletin referred to in paragraph 22 above.

28. With some exceptions, these five main areas of responsibility are also common to those agencies that have set up an ethics function or are planning to do so in the 2010-2011 biennium. In ILO, the ethics officer does not administer the financial disclosure programme, and in FAO, there is no whistleblower protection policy in place.

29. In the agencies that have not established a separate ethics office, some of the responsibilities listed in box 1 above are being – or will be – undertaken by other entities, such as the human resources management function. This is the case in IAEA. In the World Health Organization (WHO), several entities are involved, resulting in an undesirable fragmentation of ethics-related activities in the organization.

30. A major concern of the Inspectors is that, although the terms of reference promulgated for the ethics function in some organizations conform to the standards set out above, in practice this amounts to no more than a paper exercise. The clearest instance of this can be seen in WMO, which issued an administrative instrument for the ethics function in 2009, but assigned the responsibilities ad interim to the oversight function and provided no dedicated funding. ILO is also a major concern in this regard, as are those organizations that have issued terms of reference but have been slow in appointing ethics office staff, such as UNESCO.

31. There is a risk that an expanding workload may undermine the overall effectiveness of ethics offices, leading to backlogs in mandated activities. The decision to assign the chairmanship of the Senior Vendor Review Committee to the head of the United Nations Ethics Office is a case in point. Ethics offices should not branch out and incur additional responsibilities at the expense of existing duties.

B. Budget for the ethics function

32. The budget data in annex II demonstrate the low level of commitment to the ethics function in many of the agencies, with zero funding in 2010-2011 in ICAO, IMO, WIPO and UNWTO. The funding levels in ILO and IAEA are minimal in relation to the size of these organizations, while the funding in WHO, which does not have a dedicated ethics office or function, is derived from the budgets of the legal, human resources and internal oversight offices.

33. As shown in annex II, a total of some US$ 13 million is currently planned for ethics-related activities in United Nations system organizations in 2010-2011.¹⁰ Analysis of the data provided by the organizations shows that some 38 per cent of the US$ 13 million planned for 2010-2011 will fund posts of heads of ethics offices at the D-2, D-1 or P-5 levels.¹¹ In both UNFPA and UNHCR, 62 per cent of the ethics budget will fund the head of the ethics office in the biennium, compared with 51 per cent in WFP, 38 per cent in UNICEF, 29 per cent in UNDP and 18 per cent in the United Nations. In the specialized agencies with full-time ethics officers – ITU, FAO and UNESCO – the figures are 100, 53 and 40 per cent respectively. For the most part, these differences reflect the different staffing levels of the various ethics offices – the United Nations Ethics Office has nine established posts for the biennium compared with only one in ITU and two in each of UNFPA, UNHCR, FAO and UNESCO.

¹⁰ The total is somewhat underestimated as data was not provided for the United Nations Peacekeeping support account.

¹¹ Figure includes all the full-time heads of ethics posts and the proportionate amount of the dual function posts in ILO and UPU.

34. The analysis suggests that it might be more efficient and cost effective if joint services or in-sourcing arrangements were to be put in place, particularly for those organizations that are co-located. This was discussed in paragraph 25 above in the context of the smaller organizations, but there may be scope for such cooperation among some of the larger organizations as well. The Inspectors believe that the organizations should examine these options and may wish to do so in the forum of the United Nations Ethics Committee.

IV. HEADS OF ETHICS OFFICES

35. The JIU recommended in its 2006 report that the ethics function should be headed at the D-1 or P-5 level, depending on the size and structure of the organization and the number of staff to be covered. In the smaller organizations, it could be a dual-function post.¹² These and other JIU suggested standards for the head of ethics are shown in box 2 below.

Box 2

Heads of ethics offices

JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Head of ethics office at D-1/P-5 level, depending on the size and structure of the organization.
- (b) Dedicated full-time post, except in smaller organizations where it could be a dual-function, part-time or shared post.
- (c) Professional background in ethics as a required qualification.
- (d) Recruitment of head of ethics office through external/internal vacancy announcement.
- (e) Transparent recruitment and selection process, including staff representative on the appointments board.

A. Senior level post for ethics

36. The appointment of the head of ethics to a senior-level, dedicated post signifies commitment to the function, both on the part of the legislative body in its approval of the post in the programme and budget, and of the executive head in making the proposal. The United Nations and the funds and programmes have all met this standard by making appointments at the D-1 level or above (annex III). However, at the time of preparing this report the specialized agencies were lagging far behind. Only FAO, UNESCO and ITU had dedicated posts at a P-5 level or above. But there was no dedicated post for the ethics function at any level in any of the other agencies, a situation that the Inspectors found very troubling four years after the JIU recommendation in this regard.

37. The creation of dual-function posts with an ethics component in some of the larger specialized agencies is not a satisfactory response to the JIU recommendation of 2006, and shows a lack of commitment to the ethics function. Staffs in these organizations see only inadequate provision for the ethics function, and conflicts of interest, both real and perceived, in the dual nature of the posts created. This is particularly so at ILO, where responsibility for the ethics function remains with the Legal Advisor, with funding provided under the category of oversight and evaluation. However, the failure by WHO to create any kind of ethics post at all, in spite of the considerable size of the organization, gives rise to even greater concern.

38. In establishing dual-function posts, the smaller agencies must avoid creating conflicts of interest. Assigning ethics office responsibilities to the legal advisor of an organization, as has been the case in UPU, carries a significant risk in this regard and should be reconsidered. Conflict of interest may also arise when the function is assigned to the oversight office, as is currently the case in WMO, and should be avoided.

¹² JIU/REP/2006/2, para. 49 and recommendation 15 (b).

B. Professional background in ethics

39. The Inspectors strongly believe that heads of ethics offices in United Nations system organizations should have a professional background in ethics. Ethics is a recognized discipline and ethics professionals are to be found in both the private and public sectors. As ethics is a new function in United Nations system organizations, it is unlikely that there will be an adequate pool of internal candidates with the required professional qualifications and experience. The Inspectors found that, while some organizations have a requirement for a professional background in ethics for the post, only in the United Nations and UNESCO have external professionals been brought in to head the ethics office; all other appointments have been of internal candidates.

40. The Inspectors would discourage the practice of appointing staff members who are close to retirement to head the ethics function, as has been the case in several organizations. While these individuals may bring valuable organization-specific knowledge to the post, they are unlikely to have the required experience in ethics. A direct internal appointment by the executive head outside of normal recruitment processes is also problematic. These have been major concerns among the staff in the organizations.

41. To ensure that only the best professionals are appointed to head the ethics function in United Nations system organizations, there should be competitive recruitment open to both internal and external candidates on an equal basis. A professional background in ethics – in terms both of qualifications and experience – should be a requirement for the post, and this should be made clear in the vacancy announcement.

42. The implementation of the following recommendations is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 2

The executive heads should ensure that the post of head of the ethics office in their respective organizations has ethics qualifications and experience as a requirement, and this should be included in the job description for the post and in the vacancy announcement.

Recommendation 3

The executive heads should ensure that the vacancy for the appointment of the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is open to both internal and external candidates on an equal basis, and that the vacancy announcement is widely publicized.

C. Transparency in recruitment

43. In their meetings with staff representatives in organizations throughout the United Nations System, the Inspectors heard the same doubts and reservations expressed about the efficacy of the ethics function. In particular, there was deep mistrust concerning the recruitment and selection of the heads of ethics offices. The Inspectors consider that the ethics function cannot fully achieve its objectives without the support of the staffs of the organizations. They believe therefore that it is crucial that staff representatives are closely involved in the selection processes for the head of ethics office in their respective organizations. At the same time, the Inspectors recognize that no individual on the appointment board has veto power and that any final selection rests with the executive head. The implementation of the following recommendations is expected to enhance the transparency of the recruitment and selection processes for the heads of ethics offices, and hence the effectiveness of the ethics function.

Recommendation 4

The executive heads should ensure that the vacancy announcement for the appointment of the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is prepared in full consultation with the staff representatives.

Recommendation 5

The executive heads should ensure that a staff representative serves on the appointment board for the selection of the head of the ethics office.

V. INDEPENDENCE OF THE ETHICS FUNCTION

44. The Inspectors found there was a strongly held perception throughout the United Nations System of a pervasive culture of secrecy in the decision-making processes of the organizations and little or no accountability. Against this background, there was little staff buy-in to the ethics function, which was viewed merely as a management device that did nothing to address the underlying problems. Without staff confidence and staff involvement, however, the ethics function will struggle to make an impact. It is of paramount importance, therefore, that the ethics function operates independently of management.

45. The JIU suggested standards for the independence of the ethics function, relating to term limits for the head of the ethics office and reporting arrangements, are set out in box 3 below.

Box 3

Independence of the ethics function

JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Head of ethics function has a time-limited appointment of two four-year terms or two five-year terms, or one seven-year non-renewable term.
- (b) Head of ethics function reports directly to the executive head of the organization.
- (c) Annual report of the head of ethics function shall be submitted to, but shall not be changed by, the executive head.
- (d) Annual report of the head of ethics function, or summary thereof, goes to the governing body with any comments of the executive head thereon.
- (e) Head of ethics function has informal access to the governing body that is enshrined in writing.

A. Term limits

46. To ensure the independence of the ethics function, rigorous conditions governing the appointment of heads of ethics offices must be in place and must be strictly observed. The JIU standards for the grade, qualifications, experience and recruitment of the heads of ethics offices, as set out in chapter IV above, are essential elements of these conditions, as are strict term limits for the appointment, which should be clearly stated in the vacancy announcement. Term limits, properly applied, support the independence of the function by protecting the incumbent from undue influence while avoiding the risks inherent in long-term tenure.

47. The Inspectors found shortfalls in several organizations in the conditions under which the heads of ethics offices had been appointed, as was discussed in chapter IV above. They also found that the majority of the organizations that had appointed heads of ethics offices had not applied term limits (annex IV). Moreover, in those that had a requirement for term limits, it was not being strictly observed. For example, although UNICEF has a five-year term limit for the post of ethics adviser, the normal appointment practices of the organization prevail, with an initial appointment of two years renewable up to five years. Likewise in UNESCO, the appointment of the ethics officer is for an initial period of one year, with a maximum tenure of four years. Such arrangements leave the incumbent dependent on the executive head for the continuation of the appointment, which seriously undermines the independence of the function. This needs to be corrected.

48. Appointing a staff member who is within a few years of retirement to be head of the ethics office, as has been the case in several organizations, may conform to the notion of term limits, but raises other issues, as discussed in paragraph 40 above.

49. The Inspectors are of the view that a legislative body decision to apply term limits to the appointment of the head of the ethics office would reinforce the independence of the function. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 6

The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to apply term limits to the appointment of the head of the ethics office, which should be a non-renewable appointment of seven years, or no more than two consecutive appointments of four or five years, with no possibility of re-employment by the same organization.

B. Reporting arrangements

50. Under existing arrangements, all heads of ethics offices report directly to their respective executive heads, not through an intermediate management level (annex IV). Direct reporting to the executive head is a necessary but not sufficient condition for the independence of the ethics function. The head of the ethics office must also have both formal and informal access to the legislative bodies, clearly stated in administrative instruments, to ensure that the independence of the function is not circumscribed by the executive head. Formal access would be through the annual report of the ethics office, or a summary thereof, which must be submitted to the legislative body without any changes therein by the executive head, whose comments, if any, should be submitted separately. The head of the ethics office must also have the right to approach the legislative body informally when circumstances so dictate.

51. As can be seen in annex IV, the organizations are very far from the required standards for reporting. It is only in UNDP that the legislative body has decided that the ethics office should submit an annual report directly. In the United Nations, an annual report on the activities of the ethics office is submitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General, while in UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP, the executive head provides a summary report. In the specialized agencies, there were no arrangements in place for reporting on the ethics function to the legislative bodies at the time this report was prepared. And in no organization did the head of the ethics office have informal access to the legislative body.

52. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to strengthen the independence of the ethics function and hence enhance its effectiveness.

Recommendation 7

The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office submits an annual report, or a summary thereof, unchanged by the executive head, directly to the legislative body, together with any comments of the executive head thereon.

Recommendation 8

The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office has informal access to the legislative bodies which is enshrined in writing.

VI. ETHICS OFFICE RESPONSIBILITIES

A. Standards, training and guidance

53. Ethics office terms of reference include responsibilities for standard setting and policy support, training, education and outreach, and the provision of advice and guidance to staff on request. JIU suggested standards for these responsibilities are set out in box 4 below.

Box 4

Ethics office responsibilities: standards, training and guidance

JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Ethics office takes the lead role in standard setting and policy support, including but not limited to gifts, honours and decorations, conflict of interest, whistleblower protection policy and financial disclosure policy.
- (b) Ethics office takes the lead role in developing mandatory training programmes (initial and refresher) and workshops for all staff of the organization.
- (c) Ethics office develops a website on the ethics function in the organization, which is comprehensive and regularly updated.
- (d) Ethics office responds to requests for advice and guidance within specified time frames.
- (e) Ethics office maintains records of advice and guidance given.
- (f) Ethics office coordinates with other secretariat entities concerned to ensure consistency of advice and guidance provided to staff.

Standard setting and policy support

54. The annual reports of the ethics offices of the United Nations, UNDP, and UNHCR detail a range of activities in the area of standard setting and policy support (annex V). The ethics offices of the other funds and programmes have reported more limited activity, mainly related to consultations on the draft system-wide code of ethics, a reflection perhaps of the competing demands on their more limited resources.

55. In the absence of ethics offices in many of the specialized agencies, other entities may be involved in these activities, such as the human resources management office for the code of ethics, or the legal office for the financial disclosure policy. The Inspectors are of the view that a robust ethics policy framework is unlikely to emerge from such a fragmented approach.

56. The Inspectors emphasize the importance of harmonizing ethics standards across United Nations system organizations and consider that the United Nations Ethics Committee is an important forum in this regard. The draft system-wide code of ethics has been developed under the auspices of the Committee in a wide-ranging consultative process that provides a model for future initiatives. It would however benefit the work of the Committee if all United Nations system organizations participated as members.

57. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance coordination in standard setting and policy development for the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 9

The executive heads of United Nations system organizations who have not already done so should expedite the process of seeking membership for their respective organizations in the United Nations Ethics Committee.

Training, education and outreach

58. The ethics offices of the United Nations and the funds and programmes have all initiated training, education and outreach activities to disseminate the ethics message to their staffs at large (annex V). These are critical activities as they have the potential to reach all staff members of the organizations through electronic dissemination of ethics policies, procedures and guidelines and interactive on-line training. The Inspectors were informed that case-study based training in face-to-face workshops was a particularly valuable learning experience, but this required more resources and more staff time.

59. Among the agencies, only ILO, WMO, UNIDO and IAEA reported any ethics training or outreach activities (annex V). ILO uniquely had adopted a “training of trainers” approach, training selected staff volunteers to deliver ethics workshops. Although this might be cost-effective, there were questions about the sustainability of the programme.

60. The United Nations, UNDP, UNFPA, UNHCR and UNESCO are the only organizations that currently have mandatory ethics training for all staff. In several organizations, there is an ethics component in the mandatory induction programme for new staff. The Inspectors strongly believe that ethics training should be mandatory for all staff and that there should be mandatory refresher courses on a regular basis. The executive heads should take the lead in this regard.

61. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 10

The executive heads should ensure that mandatory ethics training is provided to all staff of their respective organizations, and should take the lead by participating in this training, including mandatory refresher courses that should take place every three years.

62. The Inspectors are of the view that as part of their outreach activities, ethics offices should undertake biennial staff surveys on ethics and integrity awareness in their organizations. This would enable them to benchmark progress on a regular basis, and fine-tune the ethics programme to better achieve objectives. Publicizing the results on the organizations’ intranets would enhance transparency and should encourage staff buy-in. It may be possible for biennial staff surveys to be conducted on a system-wide basis and this should be explored in the forum of the United Nations Ethics Committee.

63. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 11

The executive heads should undertake biennial staff surveys on integrity awareness and publicize the results on the intranets of their respective organizations.

Advice and guidance

64. Providing advice and guidance to staff on request is part of the day-to-day work of ethics office staff (annex V). Such requests must be dealt with promptly and efficiently so that staff gain confidence in the services of the office. While the ethics offices acknowledged the need for prompt response, most did not have formal benchmarks in place. The Inspectors believe that ethics office staff should get back with answers within 48 hours but no more than five working days. They should also maintain a confidential record of queries and responses, as well as an intranet page with such data in generic form and other information on ethics-related issues of importance to the organization. Most ethics offices have work to do in this regard.

65. The Inspectors were informed that staff might approach more than one organizational entity when seeking advice and guidance. To ensure consistency in the advice given, there must be regular consultations among those who may be called on to give ethics-related advice, including the ethics office, the human resources management office, the internal oversight office, the Ombudsperson, the legal office and the mediator. Inconsistent advice encourages “shopping around” and undermines the integrity of the entire process. The Inspectors see no compromise of independence in ensuring consistency in the advice given.

B. Whistleblower protection policy

66. JIU suggested standards for ethics office responsibilities under the policy for the protection of staff against retaliation for reporting misconduct and for cooperating with duly authorized audits or investigations – so-called whistleblower protection policy – are set out in box 5 below.

Box 5Ethics office responsibilities under the whistleblower protection policy*JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Ethics office receives complaints of alleged retaliation.
- (b) Complaints are received and reviewed by the ethics office under conditions of strict confidentiality.
- (c) Modalities for receiving complaints of alleged retaliation by the ethics office include a hotline and dedicated e-mail address.
- (d) Ethics office reviews complaints expeditiously.
- (e) Ethics office conducts a preliminary review of alleged retaliation and, if a prima facie case is found, requests a formal investigation.
- (f) Ethics office informs the complainant in writing of the outcome of the preliminary review and the investigation.
- (g) In cases where retaliation is found, ethics office informs the executive head.
- (h) In cases where the complaint of alleged retaliation is found to be frivolous or intentionally false, ethics office informs the executive head.

67. In the United Nations and the separately administered funds and programmes, the ethics office has the responsibility for administering the whistleblower protection policy (annex VI). For the most part, the modalities for receiving complaints of alleged retaliation in these organizations, and ethics office handling of complaints, conform to JIU suggested standards, although there were sometimes delays in completing the preliminary review.

68. At the specialized agencies and IAEA, whistleblower protection policies are largely absent, or only just being developed. At WHO, no single entity has responsibility for administering that policy, as claims of retaliation are handled by the Internal Oversight Services or informally by the Ombudsman. This is of concern.

69. While there are close similarities in the whistleblower protection policies that do exist, there are also some differences, including differences in coverage – for example, WFP covers interns but UNDP does not. The Inspectors believe that in the interests of equity these policies should be harmonized. In this regard, they note that review and harmonization of policies on protection against retaliation were among the core priorities for the work of the United Nations Ethics Committee in 2009. As many of the specialized agencies are currently developing their own policies, it is important that this work proceeds in full consultation with all United Nations system organizations.

70. The Inspectors were made aware of a major lacuna in whistleblower protection policies that needs to be urgently addressed. In cases where the ethics office finds there is a credible case of retaliation or threat of retaliation, it refers the matter to the internal oversight office for investigation. However, as the internal oversight office has operational independence, it is not obliged to undertake the investigation. One such case of refusal to investigate has occurred recently in the United Nations. When such cases arise, they should be referred by either the executive head or the head of ethics office to the JIU, which has the mandate to conduct investigations in its participating organizations.

71. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance the credibility and effectiveness of whistleblower protection policy.

Recommendation 12

In cases where a prima facie case of retaliation or threat of retaliation has been found by the organization's ethics office and the internal oversight office declines to undertake the investigation, the executive head, or the head of the ethics office, should refer the matter to the Joint Inspection Unit for investigation.

C. Financial disclosure policy

72. The JIU oversight lacunae report of 2006 recommended that annual confidential financial disclosure statements should be obligatory for all elected officials, all staff at the D-1 level and above, all staff members whose main duties are the procurement of goods and services or the investment of financial assets, and all professional level oversight staff, and that these financial disclosure statements should be reviewed by the ethics officer.¹³ The Inspectors reiterate the importance of this recommendation and the need for its full implementation. The Inspectors consider that ethics office staff should also file financial disclosure statements, but with the executive head.

Box 6

Ethics office responsibilities under the financial disclosure policy

JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Ethics office administers the annual financial disclosure programme for all staff concerned other than ethics office staff.
- (b) Ethics office reviews the annual financial disclosure statements and follows up, as required.
- (c) Ethics office undertakes a verification process of a random sample of financial disclosure statements to assess accuracy.
- (d) Ethics office staff file their financial disclosure statements with the executive head.
- (e) Financial disclosure statements of ethics office staff to be reviewed and verified by the legal office.

73. JIU suggested standards for ethics office responsibilities under the financial disclosure policy are set out in box 6 above. In the United Nations and the separately administered funds and programmes, the ethics office administers the financial disclosure programme and, in most cases, ethics office staff file their financial disclosure statements with the executive head or under an equivalent arrangement (annex VII). As for review and verification, this is being carried out by the ethics offices in UNDP and UNFPA, but by external firms for the United Nations, UNHCR and WFP.

74. In the absence of ethics offices in most of the agencies, other entities administer such financial disclosure programmes as exist. The Inspectors found that in most cases these amounted to no more than declarations or registers of interest by the staff concerned and that there was little or no review or verification of the information provided. At ILO and UPU, the disclosure statements of the dual-function ethics/legal advisor need to be reviewed and verified by a third party such as the head of human resources. While ICAO does not have an ethics function, there is a financial disclosure requirement but no systematic internal or external review of the contents.

75. The Inspectors learned that some agencies saw their arrangements as only temporary; that they would work towards a more developed and complete disclosure form as time and resources permitted. The Inspectors saw no evidence of any planned changes. Existing arrangements fall well short of the type of financial disclosure policy envisaged by JIU in its 2006 report and need to be enhanced as a matter of urgency.

76. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance the effectiveness of financial disclosure policies and practices in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 13

The executive heads of those organizations that have not already done so should introduce a comprehensive financial disclosure policy as a matter of urgency, including annual review and random verification by the respective ethics offices of the financial disclosure statements of all officials concerned.

VII. COMMITMENT TO THE ETHICS FUNCTION

A. Commitment of executive heads

77. Recent scandals involving some top-level officials, including some executive heads, have badly damaged the reputation of the United Nations System as a whole. It is of the utmost importance therefore that these individuals apply – and are seen to apply – rigorous ethical standards in their professional and personal lives. The ethical health of the organizations will be strongly influenced by the behaviour of those at the top. Executive heads should recognize their own obligations in this regard and take immediate steps to demonstrate a strong personal commitment to the ethics function. At the very least, they should meet the obligations set out in box 7 below.

Box 7

Obligations of executive heads under the ethics function

JIU suggested standards:

- (a) Right of the head of ethics function to participate in all senior management meetings is enshrined in writing by the executive head.
- (b) Executive head holds an annual “town hall” meeting with the staff, including a specific agenda item on ethics.
- (c) Executive head files a financial disclosure statement with the ethics office.
- (d) Ethics office review and verification of the executive head’s financial disclosure statement.
- (e) Voluntary public disclosure of executive head’s financial disclosure statement.

Senior management group

78. Executive heads can send a strong signal of their high regard for the ethics function and its importance in the hierarchy of the organization by making the head of the ethics office a member of the senior management group – providing “a seat at the table”. The head of the ethics office should have the right to participate fully in all meetings of the senior management group, and this should be enshrined in writing. Doing so helps ensure management does not mistakenly adopt policies that may impact negatively on the integrity and credibility of the organization. At all times, the operational independence of the head of the ethics office will be maintained. The Inspectors were informed that the head of the United Nations Ethics Office does attend meetings of the senior management group on a regular basis, but it appears that this practice has not been formalized. Apart from UNHCR and ITU, no other head of ethics participates in meetings at this level on a regular basis (annex VIII).

79. The implementation of the following recommendations is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 14

Executive heads should ensure that the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is a member of the senior management group and participates in all of its meetings, and should promulgate an administrative instrument to that effect.

Outreach

80. A powerful and cost-effective way for executive heads to get the ethics message across to the staffs of the organizations, while at the same time demonstrating personal commitment to the function, is to hold annual "town hall" meetings with a specific agenda item for ethics. As is shown in annex VIII, some executive heads have included ethics along with other issues in meetings held to address the staff at large, but this needs to be done more systematically.

81. The implementation of the following recommendations is expected to enhance the effectiveness of the ethics function in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 15

The executive heads should hold an annual "town hall" meeting with the staff including a specific agenda item on ethics.

Financial disclosure

82. It is of paramount importance that executive heads take the lead and set an example in the area of financial disclosure. Not only should they ensure that the organization has a robust financial disclosure programme, in line with recommendation 13 above, but they should be scrupulous in meeting the requirements of the programme in filing their own personal disclosure statements. No distinction should be made in this regard between executive heads and other staff members who are required to file. All financial disclosure statements should be filed with the ethics office, which should also undertake review and verification requirements. The Inspectors believe there is merit in executive heads also making public their financial disclosure statement, at least in summary form, but this should be on a voluntary basis.

83. The issue of financial disclosure statements for executive heads has also been addressed in a recommendation contained in a recent JIU report on the selection and conditions of service of executive heads in United Nations system organizations.¹⁴

84. The extent to which executive heads are meeting the JIU suggested standards for their own financial disclosure are indicated in annex VIII, with the United Nations and the funds and programmes close to meeting the standards and most of the specialized agencies far from the mark. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance transparency in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 16

The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to file a financial disclosure statement, which should be reviewed in the same manner as for all other staff members who are required to file such statements.

¹⁴ JIU/REP/2009/8, recommendation 11.

Allegations against the executive head

85. Recent high-profile cases that have been widely publicized have shown that executive heads can and do act with impunity in the absence of effective internal mechanisms to investigate allegations of wrongdoing against them. While the JIU has the mandate to receive and investigate allegations against executive heads, it is more likely that the alleged wrongdoing will be reported to an internal entity in the first instance, such as the ethics office or internal oversight service. As these entities report directly to the executive heads, and have only limited or no access to the legislative bodies, their independence to carry out an investigation or a review of the alleged wrongdoing, be it non-compliance with financial disclosure, fraud, etc., is seriously circumscribed.¹⁵

86. The Inspectors discussed this issue extensively in the meetings they held for this report and it was widely acknowledged that this internal oversight lacuna is a major concern for the organizations that needs to be urgently addressed. In particular, the internal investigating or reviewing entity must be able to report the outcome of the investigation or review directly to the organization's legislative body. The implementation of the following recommendation is expected to enhance oversight in United Nations system organizations.

Recommendation 17

The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for an internal mechanism to be established that would set out the modalities for the ethics office and/or the internal oversight service to investigate or undertake reviews of allegations brought against the executive head of the organization, including reporting the outcome of the investigation or review directly to the respective legislative body.

B. Dual responsibility

87. The Inspectors believe it is a dual responsibility of Member States and executive heads to address the issues raised in this report. It is important that Member States exercise their oversight function, insisting as appropriate that the standards and other guidance suggested in this report, or as they may wish to modify them, be adhered to rigorously. Member States should ensure adequate resources for the ethics function; at the same time, executive heads should be held accountable for setting the “tone at the top” and ensuring that the ethics function operates efficiently and effectively.

Ethics office responsibilities: standards, training and guidance

Organization	Standard setting and policy support	Training, education and outreach	Advice and guidance
United Nations	Key role in reviewing whistle-blower protection policies; in developing standards and procedures for procurement, and in reviewing cases involving vendors under investigation; in revising policy on financial disclosure and declaration of interest statements. Prepared draft administrative instruction addressing disclosure, storage, disposal of gifts. Relevant substantive input to the accountability framework. Member of Task Force on Investigations; support to Management Performance Board. Substantive leadership for system-wide Code of Ethics; support to ICSC on Standards of Conduct; leadership and substantive support to United Nations Ethics Committee (UNEC)	Developed mandatory online training programmes, workshops, and ethics-related programme modules for new staff, JPOs, central review bodies, human resources management, supervisory skills and GS staff development. Communicated ethics mandate through staff/management briefings, staff orientation, training in New York and field and town hall meetings. Devised ethics module for field-based central review bodies. Briefed OLA, DPKO senior leadership programme, judges of new administration of justice system, etc. Participated in professional associations and attended specialized conferences. Disseminated information on ethics policies and the work of the Ethics Office (EO) through Intranet website and distribution of educational and outreach materials. Undertook in June 2009 awareness and satisfaction survey across global Secretariat to gauge staff awareness of the Organization's ethics infrastructure and functions of EO.	In 2008/09, EO received 315 requests for advice on ethics-related concerns, compared with 344 in 2007/08 and 162 in 2006/07. Breakdown by issue was: gifts and hospitality (45); employment-related (88); other conflicts of interest (70); outside activities (84); post-employment activities (4); personal investments and assets (24). Responded to inquiries from other United Nations entities on information sharing, best practices, policies, and ethics advice and guidance. Maintains confidential written records of requests and advice and guidance given.
UNDP	Consulted, clarified and provided information on standards of conduct, both within UNDP and with UNEC. Contributed to updating policies on workplace harassment, hiring practices, whistleblower protection policies. Upon request, clarified provisions of existing administrative instruments, as well as conflict-of-interest dimension of procurement	Reviewed OHR mandatory online ethics learning course before launch. Designed and launched face-to-face ethics workshop, with other offices. Piloted training of trainers sessions. Provided briefings to raise awareness of EO role and responsibilities, including to senior managers and in field. Set up ethics helpline and dedicated e-mail address. Website developed and launched on intranet.	In 2007-08, EO received 88 requests for advice on ethics-related concerns: gifts, hospitality and honours (4); outside activities (31); employment-related (36); conflicts of interest, including personal investments/assets (16); and post-employment restrictions (1). Responded to requests from other United Nations organizations, NGOs and governmental entities for information and lessons learned. Maintains database to track requests and advice practices. Participated in UNEC preparation of system-wide Code of Ethics.		given.

UNFPA	Consultations with staff from field and headquarters on draft system-wide Code of Ethics.	Developed and launched mandatory online learning course. Sessions on ethical behaviour in the workplace included in leadership programme for middle-level managers and in induction workshop for new JPOs and National Officers. Individual briefings for first-time representatives and deputy representatives. Biennial global staff survey of 2008 aimed to ascertain awareness of EO and staff perceptions on ethics issues (respect at work, equal treatment, harassment, discrimination, observance of unethical behaviour in workplace). Ethics-related policies and procedures posted on internal website; staff notified by e-mail.	In 2009, EO responded in confidence to 102 requests for advice on ethics-related concerns: outside activities (29); receipt of gifts, awards and hospitality (15); other conflicts of interest (22); employment related (33); and post-employment (3). Responds to requests for advice and guidance within 72 hours and maintains written records of requests and advice given.
UNICEF	EO, as a member of UNEC, contributes to and benefits from the system-wide Code of Ethics and the harmonization of ethical standards and policies among members of UNEC. Contributed to policies on harassment, sexual harassment and abuse of authority. Contributing to policy discussions on conflicts of interest, gifts, and outside activities.	Developed training strategy, including online training, which will be mandatory once launched. Face-to-face training done for high-risk countries and several functional groups. Specific training in place for procurement specialists. Global staff survey in 2008 included ethics-related questions. All ethics policies (establishment of EO, whistleblower policy, financial disclosure policy, anti-fraud policy) distributed to all staff as are disciplinary measures taken. Ethics website launched.	In 2008, provided policy guidance on potential conflicts of interest to staff in the field and headquarters. Response times vary; within two days for financial disclosure; within 45 days for whistleblower protection. Maintains secured database to track requests and advice given.
UNHCR	Participated in UNEC preparation of system-wide Code of Ethics and in harmonization of ethical standards and policies among members of UNEC, as well as in standard and policy setting within UNHCR.	EO issued Facilitator's Manual that ensures all staff introduced to Code of Conduct, upon arrival and through mandatory annual refresher session for all staff. Biennial Global Staff Surveys and include Ethics Chapter with 10 dedicated ethics and integrity questions. Working with GLC to ensure that core values and principles are in all learning initiatives. Initiatives to raise awareness of EO (flash updates on	In 2008/09, EO received several hundred queries for confidential advice and support on ethics-related matters, such as interpretation of standards of conduct and their application in specific contexts. Some queries have come from staff and management of partner agencies. Benchmarks in place for response to queries on financial disclosure and whistleblower

Ethics office responsibilities under the whistleblower protection policy

Organization	Ethics office administers whistleblower protection policy	Modalities for ethics office to receive complaints of alleged retaliation	Ethics office handling of complaints of alleged retaliation
United Nations	Yes	EO receives complaints of retaliation and keeps confidential record of all complaints received. All documentation available to support complaint should be sent to EO as soon as possible. Complaints received in person, by mail, e-mail or fax, or through EO helpline. Procedures in place to ensure confidentiality of complaints. Complaints stored securely; only EO has access.	EO conducts preliminary review to determine if complainant engaged in a protected activity. EO seeks to complete review within 45 days. If prima facie case found, EO refers case in writing to OIOS for investigation; complainant notified. If EO believes potential conflict of interest exists with OIOS review, EO may recommend to SG alternative investigating mechanism. OIOS will seek to complete investigation and submit report to EO within 120 days. If EO believes there may be a conflict of interest in OIOS conducting the investigation, EO may recommend to SG that complaint be referred to an alternative investigating mechanism. Pending completion of investigation, EO may recommend SG take measures to safeguard interests of complainant. Once EO receives OIOS report, it informs complainant of outcome and makes its recommendations to head of office concerned and USG for Management. In practice it is taking longer than 45 days to complete the preliminary review because of complexities.
UNDP	Yes	EO receives complaints of retaliation and keeps confidential record. Complainant has 60 calendar days after the last retaliatory act or alleged threat of retaliation to forward all documentation to EO. Complaint may be made in person, by telephone, mail, e-mail or fax.	EO sends acknowledgment of receipt of complaint. EO conducts preliminary review to determine if complainant engaged in a protected activity. Normally EO will complete review within 45 days. If prima facie case found, EO refers case to OAI for investigation; complainant notified. OAI will seek to complete investigation and submit report to EO within 120 days. If EO believes potential conflict of interest exists with OAI review of complaint, EO may refer complaint to Chair of UN Ethics Committee and inform Administrator. Pending completion of investigation, EO may recommend Administrator take measures to safeguard interests of complainant. If EO determines investigation established retaliation or threat of retaliation, EO makes recommendations to Administrator and refers case to LSO/BOM for action against staff member found to have engaged in retaliatory action.
UNFPA	Yes	EO receives formal complaint in person, by telephone, e-mail or other means and keeps confidential record. Complainant must file within 60 calendar days after alleged threat of	EO conducts preliminary review to determine if complainant engaged in a protected activity. EO seeks to complete review within 45 days. If prima facie case found, EO refers case in writing to DOS for investigation; complainant notified. DOS seeks to complete investigation and submit report to EO within 120 calendar days. Pending completion of investigation, EO may recommend measures to safeguard interests of

If EO believes potential conflict of interest exists with DOS review of complaint, EO may recommend to ED that complaint be referred to alternative investigating mechanism. EO informs complainant of outcome of investigation. EO makes recommendation to ED and/or concerned officials.
UNICEF	Yes	EO receives complaints and keeps confidential record of all complaints. All documentation available to support complaint should be sent to EO promptly and in any event no later than 60 calendar days after alleged act or threat of retaliation. EO. Receives complaints in person, or by telephone, mail, e-mail or fax.	EO acknowledges complaint promptly if complainant can be contacted. If possible EO completes initial review within 45 days of receiving complaint. If prima facie case found, EO refers matter to OIA for investigation and notifies complainant. OIA seeks to complete investigation and submit report to EO within 90 days. If EO believes potential conflict of interest exists with OIA review, EO may recommend to ED that complaint be referred to alternative investigating mechanism. Pending completion of investigation, EO may recommend ED take measures to safeguard interests of complainant. Once EO receives investigation report, complainant notified and EO makes recommendations to ED.
UNHCR	Yes	EO receives complaints and keeps a confidential record of all complaints. All documentation available to support complaint should be sent to EO promptly and in any event no later than 90 calendar days after the retaliatory act becomes known to complainant. Complaints received in person, or by telephone, mail, e-mail or fax. EO and Administration to protect confidentiality of individual's identity to maximum extent possible.	EO acknowledges complaint within five working days of receipt. Seeks to complete initial review within 45 calendar days. Ethics in the United Nations system

Note by the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General has the honour to transmit, for the consideration of the General Assembly, his comments and those of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled “Ethics in the United Nations system” (JIU/REP/2010/3).

* A/65/150.

Summary

The report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), entitled “Ethics in the United Nations system” (JIU/REP/2010/3) follows up on a previous report of JIU on oversight lacunae “in order to determine progress, lessons learned and best practices in establishing and implementing the ethics function throughout the United Nations system”. This report reviews the staffing, funding and responsibilities of the ethics offices in place throughout the system.

The present report contains the views of United Nations system organizations on the recommendations provided in the JIU report. The views of the system have been consolidated on the basis of inputs provided by member organizations of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB), who welcomed the comprehensive review of the ethics functions contained in the JIU report, and concentrated their comments mainly on the individual recommendations. Their general comments focused on the standards proposed, the details of the ethics functions across the system and the role of the ethics offices. While generally accepting the recommendations, agencies expressed concern regarding several of them, including the concept of a shared ethics function among smaller agencies.

I. Introduction

1. The Joint Inspection Unit report entitled “Ethics in the United Nations system” follows up on a previous report of JIU on oversight lacunae in order to determine progress, lessons learned and best practices in establishing and implementing the ethics function throughout the United Nations system. The report reviews the staffing, funding and responsibilities of the ethics offices in place throughout the system.

II. General comments

2. CEB members welcomed the comprehensive review of the ethics functions described in the JIU report and concentrated their comments mainly on the individual recommendations. Their general comments focused on the standards proposed, the details of ethics functions across the system and the role of the ethics offices.

3. Agencies noted that JIU had presented “suggested standards” for the operation of ethics offices. Agencies appreciated the effort that creating these standards entailed, considering that they were based on input received by JIU from many sources. However, agencies advised that these should not be seen as established standards for the professional practice of ethics in the United Nations. Agencies indicated that professional standards should be established by ethics officers themselves, perhaps through the growing mechanisms of the United Nations Ethics Committee and the system-wide ethics network, representing inter-agency networks of international ethics officers.

4. Agencies noted that, in compiling the report, JIU had endeavoured to comprehensively document current practices in the agencies surveyed, and these were described in the annexes to the report. In most cases, JIU had corrected any errors discovered in the draft version, and agencies noted that their comments had been largely taken into account. In several cases, however, agencies reported that comments intended to clarify some issues had not been fully incorporated into the text of the final report. For example, a bullet point within the executive summary regarding ethics office responsibilities stated that “[i]n the specialized agencies and IAEA, whistleblower protection policies are largely absent, or only just being developed”. While the statement might be factually correct, some agencies noted that such broad statements could lead readers to assume that specific agencies did not have these important policies in place. While the relevant details could be found in the annexes to the report, specialized agencies that did indeed have such policies in place had objected to this broad-brush approach to reporting. In addition, several agencies noted examples of inaccuracies in the annex tables, and called upon JIU to issue corrections as necessary to ensure an accurate record, despite the fact that JIU had corrected known errors prior to publication of the report.

5. Finally, agencies called attention to paragraph 16 of the report, which stated: “The hope for the ethics function is that it may prevent issues from becoming problems needing conflict resolution.” Agencies noted that the ethics function safeguarded the highest standards of integrity and fostered a culture of ethics, transparency and accountability by preventing conflicts of interest and safeguarding organizational integrity. Ethics functions within the United Nations did not directly address issues of conflict in the workplace, nor did they replace other offices that dealt with conflict, such as ombudsmen. Agencies submitted that a highly effective ethics function increased ethical awareness, enhanced ethical decision-making, encouraged ethical action and supported ethical leadership. The success of an ethics function should not be measured by a reduction in workplace conflicts, disputes or grievances.

III. Specific comments on recommendations

Recommendation 1: The legislative bodies of the smaller organizations should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for providing the ethics function through either a joint ethics office established by a group of organizations on a cost-sharing basis or in-sourcing to the ethics office of another organization on a cost-sharing/cost-recovery basis.

6. Noting that this recommendation is directed at governing bodies, agencies commented that it presented several challenges and would require a high degree of coordination among agencies with independent and differing governance structures and therefore on the surface might be impractical to implement. Nevertheless, while some agencies questioned its viability and practicality, several organizations noted that this possibility had been discussed at the senior level, with positive results, and that they were moving towards implementation. Therefore, while this approach could prove viable for some agencies, others might have difficulty participating owing to the specific mandate and requirements of each organization.

Recommendation 2: The executive heads should ensure that the post of head of the ethics office in their respective organizations has ethics qualifications and experience as a requirement, and this should be included in the job description for the post and in the vacancy announcement.

7. Agencies generally supported this recommendation and agreed in principle that executive heads should ensure that the head of the ethics function possessed the relevant professional qualifications and experience in the field of organizational ethics, and that these requirements should be included in the relevant job description.

Recommendation 3: The executive heads should ensure that the vacancy for the appointment of the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is open to both internal and external candidates on an equal basis, and that the vacancy announcement is widely publicized.

8. Agencies voiced their qualified support for this recommendation, in particular if the ethics function was a full-time position within one organization or shared across several smaller organizations. However, if the ethics function was part-time and combined with other duties within the same organization, it might be difficult to advertise the ethics function requirements separately from other (part-time) duties, as these might have an impact on the overall qualifications and skills required of the successful candidate. This might limit the suitability of external candidates to fill the position. Furthermore, this recommendation could also conflict with staff regulations of individual organizations, which might give preference to internal candidates.

Recommendation 4: The executive heads should ensure that the vacancy announcement for the appointment of the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is prepared in full consultation with the staff representatives.

9. CEB members supported this recommendation, but noted that it lacked clarity on what competencies would be required at the staff committee level to ensure added value in the preparation of the vacancy announcement for the head of an ethics office.

Recommendation 5: The executive heads should ensure that a staff representative serves on the appointment board for the selection of the head of the ethics office.

10. Agencies agreed in principle that the ethics function required the support and participation of the staff members of the organization and considered that it was useful for a staff representative to be duly consulted on the selection of the head of the ethics office, as called for in that recommendation. They noted, however, that approach might not be practical in the case of a shared ethics position (as suggested in recommendation 1), since it might require agreements between organizations and their respective staff councils.

Recommendation 6: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to apply term limits to the appointment of the head of the ethics office, which should be a non-renewable appointment of seven years, or no more than two consecutive appointments of four or five years, with no possibility of re-employment by the same organization.

11. Agencies understood that term limits (or non-renewable appointments) provided the head of the ethics office with operational independence and some job security, especially when asked to make difficult judgement calls. Therefore agencies generally supported the implementation of term limits for the heads of ethics offices; however, they indicated the need for the flexible application of such limits and referred to several examples that could make implementation of the recommendation difficult. At least one agency cited an incumbent recruited without any assignment limitation, and therefore found it difficult to apply this recommendation retroactively, while another agency cited staff rotation policies that appeared to conflict with the recommendation. In addition, agencies noted that some ethics functions might be performed by a staff member who also performed other duties for which there would be no term limits, thereby complicating the application of restrictions on the contract. Furthermore, agencies commented that the recommendation contained several possibilities for contract length, between 7 and 10 years, and expressed uncertainty regarding the benchmark that should be used to select the best approach. Finally, some agencies noted that these term limits could conflict with established staff rules and regulations regarding staff appointments and would need to be addressed by the legislative bodies.

Recommendation 7: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office submits an annual report, or a summary thereof, unchanged by the executive head, directly to the legislative body, together with any comments of the executive head thereon.

12. Agencies agreed with this recommendation and supported the submission of a report by the head of the ethics office directly to the legislative body. Agencies noted that the legislative bodies of an organization had the prerogative to request submission of these types of report, which were limited in substance to systemic matters and work statistics.

Recommendation 8: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to ensure that the head of the ethics office has informal access to the legislative bodies which is enshrined in writing.

13. Agencies noted that ethics offices already had access to the legislative bodies through formal mechanisms, as called for in recommendation 7, and understood that informal access enabled the head of the ethics office to raise extremely serious or sensitive ethics issues. They also noted, however, that this type of access needed to be handled with extreme care, sensitivity and confidentiality in order to avoid politicization, undue influence or the appearance that the head of the ethics office was taking instructions from a Member State. Agencies generally supported the spirit of the recommendation, with the exception of the component that called for formally enshrining this access in writing, the rationale for which they did not understand.

Recommendation 9: The executive heads of United Nations system organizations who have not already done so should expedite the process of seeking membership for their respective organizations in the United Nations Ethics Committee.

14. CEB members, in particular the specialized agencies, believed that active participation in a system-wide network of ethics officers provided an appropriate forum through which to coherently apply ethics standards and policies across the system. To that end, the United Nations system-wide ethics network was created to provide a professional affiliation for international ethics practitioners. The goals of the network included: the exchange of successful practices; issuance of model guidance; internal benchmarking; peer review and programme assessment; and career development. Therefore, the specialized agencies did not believe that membership in the United Nations Ethics Committee would be necessary. The Committee continued to support the ethics officers of the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, through which functional leadership and oversight of local ethics offices was provided by the Director of the Ethics Office of the Secretariat.

Recommendation 10: The executive heads should ensure that mandatory ethics training is provided to all staff of their respective organizations, and should take the lead by participating in this training, including mandatory refresher courses that should take place every three years.

15. Agencies noted that periodic training on ethics was considered best practice and was a key function of every ethics office. However, they observed that the periodic training (every three years) proposed in the recommendation might not be suitable for all agencies, owing to fiscal constraints, and therefore supported implementation of the recommendation within agency budgetary resources. Beyond the issue of financial constraints, agencies noted that ethics education should continue throughout a staff member's career, at regular intervals, with training being given annually or every two to three years; or in cases of significant job change, such as a promotion. They stressed that good practices in the field of organizational ethics suggested a mixture of mandatory and voluntary training geared towards the interests and professional disciplines of staff members, and with the participation of executive heads.

16. Agencies offered several alternative approaches to enhancing training, including ethics refresher courses, offered as components of other related training packages, such as legal or procurement training, which would be useful in mainstreaming ethics training. This approach could prove more cost-effective and allow comprehensive ethics refresher courses to be given less frequently. Another approach involved person-to-person dialogue, in sessions lead by line-of-sight management. These sessions would ensure that staff members discussed ethical standards and workplace conduct with their own respective managers. Ideally, organizations should deploy ethics education initiatives using a “management cascade” approach, in which each successive line of managers delivered ethics training to the staff reporting directly to him/her.

Recommendation 11: The executive heads should undertake biennial staff surveys on integrity awareness and publicize the results on the Intranets of their respective organizations.

17. Agencies did not object to conducting staff surveys and indicated that surveys on integrity awareness could help to measure the impact of an ethics agenda on organizational culture and on staff perceptions and attitudes towards the institution. Given the effort and expense associated with such activities, however, agencies noted that the JIU report should have contained a more detailed cost-benefit analysis. Nevertheless, agencies agreed to undertake this activity to the extent possible within available budgetary resources.

Recommendation 12: In cases where a prima facie case of retaliation or threat of retaliation has been found by the organization’s ethics office and the internal oversight office declines to undertake the investigation, the executive head, or the head of the ethics office, should refer the matter to the Joint Inspection Unit for investigation.

18. Agencies supported the recommendation that alternative investigation mechanisms should be employed when the internal oversight office either could not (in the case of a conflict of interest, for example) or should not (owing to priorities and resource restraints, for example) undertake an investigation. Agencies agreed that JIU could provide an alternative under these rare circumstances, but strongly suggested that the recommendation should refrain from explicitly calling for JIU to proceed in such cases. Organizations further noted that the solution to the types of cases addressed in this recommendation was not to introduce a new entity, such as JIU, in addition to the internal investigative functions already established, but rather to ensure the independent authority of the internal investigative function.

Recommendation 13: The executive heads of those organizations that have not already done so should introduce a comprehensive financial disclosure policy as a matter of urgency, including annual review and random verification by the respective ethics offices of the financial disclosure statements of all officials concerned.

19. Organizations of the United Nations system supported this recommendation, but noted that the report could have been strengthened by including more substantial information on the nature and extent of the procedures for implementing financial disclosure practices. In that regard, agencies indicated, in particular, that the linkages that might give rise to actual or perceived conflicts of interest were not always clear. Agencies noted that additional information on the cost-effectiveness of outsourced services could have helped them assess the viability of this option, considering the resources required for implementation, and in particular given that they generally considered financial disclosure as one part of a comprehensive programme for the identification and remediation of personal conflicts of interest.

Recommendation 14: Executive heads should ensure that the head of the ethics office in their respective organizations is a member of the senior management group and participates in all of its meetings, and should promulgate an administrative instrument to that effect.

20. Agencies generally agreed with this recommendation, which called for ethics office participation in senior management meetings. However, agencies noted that the term “senior management” could vary across agencies, and more clarity by JIU regarding the appropriate level of participation would have strengthened this recommendation. Nevertheless, many agencies encouraged the adoption of a pragmatic approach to its implementation, by ensuring that ethics offices participated in the senior management meetings most relevant to the ethics function and not necessarily in every meeting that brought together staff at the highest levels. Furthermore, agencies noted that, in some cases, it might not be appropriate for the ethics function to participate in senior management group meetings, given that the ethics officer would then become involved in the decision-making process and, by extension, could not independently evaluate any complaints that could arise in response to any decision taken.

Recommendation 15: The executive heads should hold an annual “town hall” meeting with the staff including a specific agenda item on ethics.

21. CEB members supported this recommendation and many agencies indicated that they had already conducted town hall meetings that included discussions of ethics issues. Some of the agencies with a more decentralized structure reported opting for ethics-related agenda items to be included in regional meetings and workshops.

Recommendation 16: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to file a financial disclosure statement, which should be reviewed in the same manner as for all other staff members who are required to file such statements.

22. Agencies, while noting that this recommendation was intended for legislative bodies, supported the spirit of this recommendation. However, CEB members noted that the current text of the recommendation diminished the oversight of the financial disclosure statements filed by executive heads of the funds and programmes. As noted in the report, executive heads of the funds and programmes currently filed their financial disclosure statements with the United Nations Ethics Office, and these were reviewed by an external body. Other staff members of organizations requiring them to submit financial disclosure statements did so to bodies internal to those organizations, which subsequently reviewed those statements. By recommending that legislative bodies should direct executive heads to “file a financial disclosure statement, which should be reviewed in the same manner as for all other staff members who are required to file such statements”, the executive heads of the funds and programmes would then submit their statements to internal bodies for review, instead of the current practice of submitting the statements to the ethics office for review by an external body.

Recommendation 17: The legislative bodies should direct their respective executive heads to put forward proposals for an internal mechanism to be established that would set out the modalities for the ethics office and/or the internal oversight service to investigate or undertake reviews of allegations brought against the executive head of the organization, including reporting the outcome of the investigation or review directly to the respective legislative body.

23. Noting that this recommendation was directed at governing bodies, agencies supported the development of appropriate modalities for investigating allegations brought against an executive head, and many agencies indicated that these procedures already existed. Agencies agreed that developing the appropriate standards and processes in advance of such serious situations provided an opportunity for careful reflection and consideration. Furthermore, agencies noted the potential for an inherent, or perceived, conflict of interest if investigations of this nature were undertaken only by an internal service, and indicated that there was scope within this recommendation for incorporating an alternative practice, such as utilizing external entities.

24. Agencies also remarked that in the course of all such investigations, the due process rights of the executive head, including confidentiality, should be respected and duly safeguarded, and that any referral to an external independent investigation body should be considered only after such a need had been identified by the internal body, thereby avoiding a situation in which frivolous or obviously unsubstantiated allegations were automatically referred to a third party for investigation.
