About the city of Ankara

Very familiar to most people as the capital of Turkey, Ankara is actually only the country's second-biggest city, being considerably smaller than Istanbul. However, Ankara is actually a very large and presentable Turkish city, constantly expanding and offering a rather sophisticated and modern character. Many wide streets are now lined with coffee shops and eateries, particularly around the energetic Kızılay area.

Various tourist hotspots present themselves around the city of Ankara and in particular, along the Ataturk Bulvari, which serves as a prominent artery. The Ulus Meydanı, known simply as 'Ulus', is another important tourism hub in the city and this central square is close to a number of leading museums, while also offering a choice of accommodation and inexpensive restaurants. Nearby, the Ankara Tourist Information Office is easy to find and stands directly opposite the Maltepe Ankaray Train Station, on the Gazi Mustafa Kemal Bulvarı.

Ankara Tourist Information and Tourism: Top Sights

Although Ankara is somewhat overshadowed by the enormous Turkish city of Istanbul, but really does compete well in the way of quality tourist attractions. The city's Citadel walls are positively ancient and comprise a mixture of different architectural styles through the ages. Also of a great age and much visited are the Roman Baths of Ankara, which remain in a good state of repair, considering that they are more than 1,700 years old. The Ataturk Mausoleum is yet another major sight, while for families, the attractions within the Ataturk Forest Farm and Zoo and Aquapark Club Watercity comes highly recommended.

Atatürk's Mausoleum (Anıtkabir)

Head to the Old Town 'Ulus' area of Ankara to find the most historical landmarks and imposing mosques. These include both the Lion's Den Mosque (Aslanhane Camii) and the Yeni Mosque (Cenab Ahmet Pasa Camii), with the ancient Column of Julian (Queen of Sheba Monument) also standing within this part of the city. For the best views of Ankara, head to the Cankaya area and climb to the top of the Atakule Tower, where the panoramas are quite unbeatable. For something a little newer but just as impressive, take time out to pay a visit to the very beautiful Kocatepe Mosque which immediately became the city's biggest mosque when it was completed in the late 1980s.

Kocatepe Mosque

If you are planning to head outside of Ankara and looking for possible day trips, then you will be pleased to find endless appealing Turkish delights within easy reach of the city itself. Many will favour excursions to the historical town of Beypazarı or to the city of Antalya, which stands alongside the Mediterranean coastline and is almost overflowing with characterful mosques. For something very different and quite extraordinary, be sure to check out the unique, moon-like rock formations of Cappadocia. However, the allure of Istanbul is quite undeniable, although at around 350 km / 217 miles to the north-west, it is a little too far for a day trip and certainly deserves a longer excursion. Tourists able to visit Istanbul will no doubt be overwhelmed by its Grand Bazaar, where in excess of 6,000 different shops attract some 400,000 keen shoppers - each day.

Ethnography Museum Ankara

There are several very notable museums to be found within Ankara, offering a broad spectrum of information on a range of different topics, including the city's rich Ottoman history and even the founder of the Republic of Turkey himself, Mustafa Kemal Atatürk. The award-winning Museum of Anatolian Civilisations should certainly feature at the top of any sightseeing itinerary, along with the Ankara Ethnography Museum. Close to the Tandoğan Kapalı Çarşı shopping district, the vintage engines and trains displayed within the Open-Air Steam Locomotive Museum may also be of interest.

Field Trip – Beyazaltın

About Beyazaltın

Beyazaltın village is in Eskisehir region around 200 km west of Ankara. The village takes its name from the famous sepiolite. Beyazaltın means in Turkish (white gold) and it is one of the famous names of sepiolite in Turkey. Turkey has the 70% of the sepiolite reserves of the world and Eskisehir has the largest share in Turkey's sepiolite reserves. Speolite is a first class element in the pipe, trinket and ornament production.

Some examples of speolite used in the pipe, trinket and ornament production

About the Project

A land consolidation project was implemented in the village during 2007-10. The main objectives of the project had been to: i) reduce land fragmentation, ii) renew irrigation system and increase area covered by irrigation and iii) construct new field and access roads in the project area. The project manager from GDAR presented the project and its outcome and the mission met with representatives of the local municipality and around 20 local farmers who had participated in the project. The project included around 1,000 parcels, which through the project were consolidated into 600 parcels. The average parcel size increased from 1.4 ha to 2.5 ha as a result of the project. Before the project, 500 ha were irrigated through open channels. After the project, 1,000 ha is irrigated through 18 new wells, a pumping system, pipelines and sprinklers. The system combines the collective and the individual as each farmer can water his fields by closing for the water to the other fields. This also allows the individual farmers to add fluid fertilizer to the water which should be more cost-effective than the normal use of fertilizers. It was explained that the costs of the new irrigation system had been around 500 EUR/ha.

Irrigation in Beyazaltm village, Eskişehir region, included in land consolidation project finished in 2009.

The average yield in wheat in the area has increased from 3,000 kg/ha to 7,000 kg/ha because of the project and all the participating farmers increased their income with more than 25%. The project (consolidation and irrigation in combination) has allowed for more diversification of products in the area. Before the project, mainly wheat was produced.

Around 25% of the land in the project area is owned by absentee owners not living in the village and they rent out their land. The project approach was that each owner got land out of the consolidation process of the same value as he/she entered the process with. Thus, the participants were not offered the opportunity to sell land and buy additional land during the process. Despite of the legal framework that allows for compulsory implementation of land consolidation projects, the re-allotment plan was negotiated between the participants and all voluntary agreed to participate. During the re-allotment process some of the owners wanted to keep their parcels in their old position and this hampered to some degree the outcome of the project. Some of the farmers met by the mission today regretted that they had not consolidated further when they had the chance and the village may consider to apply for a new land consolidation project to consolidate further.

Access to Beyazaltın will be got by bus and hence, participants should inform Mr. Ali Enver Arslan (ali@timezone.com.tr) before 3 October 2015.
