

Latest trends

As normal in the period of the year, the main importers and brokers have already completed their activities for the year-end sales, while wholesale markets will increase in activity over the coming weeks as restaurant menus and fish counters increase their festive range in preparation for Christmas and the New Year. The festive end of year sales season will be more concentrated as the two main festivities will be on a Sunday.

Inflation throughout Europe will no doubt impact end of year sales as consumers will be looking for value for money and ready to substitute between festive product categories in order to keep spending under control.

The traditional end of year festivities in France lead to increased consumption of duck, salmon and shellfish. However, due to difficulties in poultry production following avian flu outbreaks, there may be a move to substitute part of the festive menu with more fish and fish products. A survey indicated that 27 percent of French consumers plan to reduce spending for Christmas due to inflation.

Some traditional products, such as wet-salted cod, very popular in the Southern part of the continent, reported consumer resistance to very high prices. Overall, the general trend point for lower price levels in December, after the record prices reached in September. About half of the recorded prices in the European Price Report stayed stable, 22 percent increased, but 29 percent declined over the course of December, compared with November price levels.

GROUNDFISH

Wet-salted cod fillets from frozen raw material (Gadus macrocephalus) and wet-salted cod fillets (Gadus morhua) from fresh raw material of Faroese and Icelandic origin have reached sky-high prices, leading to consumer resistance, despite the fact that December is generally the main consumption period for these products. Expectations for the month of January are not the best either. In fact, in view of a possible economic downturn, there were no strong orders for delivery during January. Cured cod products are thus often bought "just in time". A price drop is possible, despite the limited supply situation. In fact, everything depends on the general geopolitical situation.

The EU Commission published its proposal for catch limits for fish stocks in EU waters of the Atlantic ocean, Kattegat and Skagerrak for 2023. Six stocks will see an increase in catch limits while remaining within MSY (Maximum Sustainable Yield) objectives. The proposals include a 12 percent increase for anglerfish (monk), 10 percent increase for Southern hake, 33 percent increase in megrims, 91 percent increase in plaice fished in Kattegat and 20 percent increase in sole fished in area 8a and 8b. For nine other stocks scientific data was not sufficient and therefore the Commission proposes a precautionary approach with either a roll over or a decrease in catch limits. Sustainable fishing has made progress in the European Union. In 2022, 80 percent of the TACs (Total Allowable Capture) were set at MSY level compared to only 14 percent of TACs in 2009.

Marine fuel prices increased last month, which adds further cost pressure for the fishing industry. Prices remain at very high levels therefore which puts obvious pressure on the catching sector.

Fish prices are increasing throughout Europe due to increased cost of transport, lighting and cold storage amongst other factors. As mentioned in our last report certain major species such as hake are being sold in Spain at prices 30 percent higher than last year at retail level and consumers are reported to be pre purchasing fresh fish to freeze and store for Christmas to avoid paying higher prices later.

TUNA - BILLFISHES

Fishing in the Western and Central Pacific region slows down slightly but remains at the moderate level. Several carriers have been diverted to other markets due to strong demand elsewhere, especially the Ecuadorian market. Skipjack price rebounds due to the reduced carrier landings.

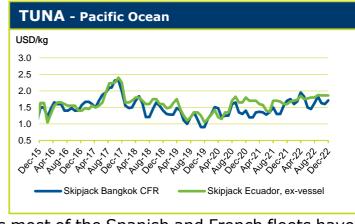

Catching in the Indian Ocean slows down to the moderate level. Furthermore, fishing efforts have dropped significantly as most of the Spanish and French fleets have been tied up due to the exhaustion of the yellowfin quota. Both skipjack yellowfin prices increase.

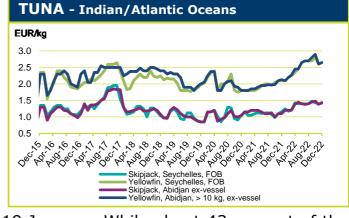

Fishing in the Atlantic Ocean continues to improve and is reported to be good. Despite the improvement, both skipjack and yellowfin prices move upwards in line with the prevailing price trends in the global market.

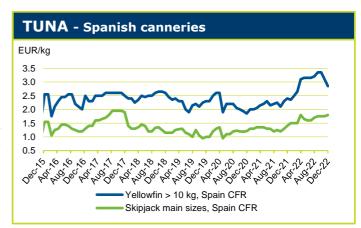

The second 72-days IATTC 'veda' in Eastern Pacific Ocean will be in force until 19 January. While about 43 percent of the ETP fleet has opted to continue to fish during this period, the actual fishing effort is only about 31 percent. For these vessels, remains moderate with percentage of yellowfin. Skipjack and yellowfin prices remain stable.

With the drop in supply from the Indian Ocean, European prices for skipjack increases, however, yellowfin continue to fall due to a drop in demand. The indicative price for cooked, single cleaned skipjack loins increases moderately.

CEPHALOPODS

Squid prices remain firm at last month's levels. Catches in South Africa are moderate but the festive season and some labour problems may interrupt operations in the next weeks.

Octopus catches are in their peak season in Indonesia this month and prices have been stable for two months now. Demand in the EU market was low, so exports from Indonesia to this market have been plummeting. Octopus prices in the European Union are mainly influenced by African octopus coming from Morocco and Mauritania, supply of which is now is decreasing, which might open markets for octopus from other exporters.

CRUSTACEANS

Shrimp prices are decreasing due to lower demand these days. The United States of America does not report any increase in demand, as plenty of shrimp are in cold storage in the country, already since several months. Some producers and packers have been trying to reduce their capacity and adjust production to deal with the current situation.

For Argentine shrimp, there has been some stabilization after months of continuous price decreases. The Christmas demand is the main reason, but inventories in both Argentina and Europe remain high.

Vannamei prices are going down in all major European markets, due to oversupply. Ecuadorian producers are impacted by several political decisions, such as the reduction of fuel subsidies, therefore supply might decline from the present high level.

CRUSTACEANS (cont.)

Crab and lobster prices are firm compared to previous years due to lower supply. However given the context of general inflation for all festive products and a certain level of supply tension, stocks of these species should sell well at the end of year.

Both Christmas and New Year's day fall on a Sunday this year which means that there will not be the benefit of a long holiday weekend to extend consumption, the festive end of year sales season will be more concentrated therefore.

BIVALVES

Bouchot mussels continue to be present in the French market. As mentioned in previous price reports, since the summer production has suffered in many European production zones from high temperatures, lack of rain that brings nutrients to coastal waters and predation from spider crab, starfish or seabream.

As with other food products inflation and cost increases are also putting pressure on producers to sell at higher prices. One effect of this is a decrease in unit pack size of some mussels in order to maintain the same price per pack while increasing price per kg. This can be seen in France where 1kg packs are often available, especially for the higher end range such as red label bouchot mussels in 1kg plastic trays. The difference between a traditional 1.4 kg tray and a 1 kg tray allows some flexibility in unit price adjustment, bearing in mind that fixed costs remain similar.

This deficit of production will have an obvious effect on all European mussel markets with high prices until at least the next growing season. Prices in Europe in general have again increased in November at all stages of sale. As mentioned in the last European price report, Galician mussel farmers have reported record prices for this century in 2022 according to La Voz de Galicia. The Rungis price quotations show increased prices for all origins in November compared to last year, particularly for Bouchot mussels where wholesale selling prices have increased by more than 70 percent year-over-year.

Oyster production in the Thau region, on the French Mediterranean coast, is reported to be difficult in early November with high mortalities due to an exceptionally warm autumn. These high temperatures late in the season prevent the oysters from recovering after an exceptionally warm summer. The Mediterranean region represents around 10 percent of French oyster production. France is the most important producer and consumer of oysters in Europe with a national annual production of around 80 000 tonnes.

As mentioned in the last EPR, oyster prices are also being affected by inflation with increasing costs of metal structures, packaging, salaries, electricity and fuel. The increased selling price of oysters in France is forecast to be around 15 percent, the peak end of year oyster season will therefore be more costly for the consumer. End of year sales are particularly important for oyster producers as the month of December can represent over 50 percent of yearly turnover.

The main French auctions for highest landings in October 2022 were Boulogne-sur-Mer, St Quay, Erquy and Lorient. This is due to the scallop season in the Northern Brittany seafronts which generated extra volumes for St Quay and Erquy-

SMALL PELAGICS

Small pelagics are in good supply at the moment, while demand is relatively low. The strong winter prevents fishing in the Northern part of the continent. In expectation of low arrivals in coming months, price levels are going up.

FRESHWATER

Carp is a main fish product traditionally present at Christmas Eve in many Central European countries. As a result, trade of this product is increasing, taking with it prices. After the holiday season, demand will decline leading to a soft trading environment.

Prices for third country imported freshwater species have remained relatively stable according to wholesale market price quotations in Europe. Especially pangasius experienced no price changes in a year-over-year (YOY) comparison. Pangasius is thus a product for the European consumer who is looking for lower priced alternatives in this moment of high inflation and high food costs. Pangasius is one of the species benefitting from reduced container and shipment costs of exported frozen. Global container prices have decreased from their high levels during COVID-19 but remain high. The Global Container Freight Index (FBX) quoted USD 2 786 on 1 December compared to a peak of USD 11 109 on 10 September 2021. However, pre-COVID-19 levels were much lower again, on 6 March 2020 the index was at USD 1 358 which is 48 percent of the current price and an eight of the peak price.

In its proposal for 2023 catch limits, the EU Commission proposes to reinforce the existing measures for the protection of eels in all relevant EU waters, specifically in the Atlantic, the Baltic Sea and the Mediterranean in order to help the stock recover. The proposal for 2023 extends the closure for any eel fishing activity from three to six consecutive months in marine and adjacent brackish waters and clarifies to Member States how to set closure periods to ensure their effectiveness. In its advice on the European eel stock, ICES reiterated that the status of the stock remains critical. ICES also advised that there should be zero catches of eel in all habitats and at all life stages. In addition, ICES advises that non-fisheries impacts, such as habitat destruction and loss, migration barriers (hydropower, pumping stations) and pollution, should be minimised and, where possible, eliminated. In its technical evaluation of the Member States' implementation of the Eel Regulation published earlier this year, ICES found no overall progress by Member States and highlighted the need for more effort in addressing non-fisheries impacts.

FRESHWATER (cont.)

According to Europol, trafficking of glass eels is one of the most substantial and lucrative illegal trades of protected species worldwide, with illegal profits estimated to be up to EUR 3 billion in peak years. The recent relaxation of COVID-19 travel restrictions allowed for the return of the practice of smuggling glass eels out of EU borders in passengers' baggage.

Glass eels (baby, angula in Spain, civelle in French) reached their highest price in history on 2 November in the Asturias auction of Ribadesella in Spain, selling for EUR 7 280 per kg. The previous record was in 2019 at a price of EUR 6 260 per kg.

SALMON

Norway's total fresh salmon average free-on-board (FOB) Oslo price continued to rise during week 47 of 2022 to NOK 78.11/kg, up 9.3 percent compared to week before. In addition, average FOB price for the EU market rose to NOK 76.12/kg at week 47, as for the US market to NOK 93.94/kg. Prices to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland fell to NOK 72.55/kg.

The Norwegian Seafood Council (NSC) figures show that Norway exported 125 234 tonnes of salmon worth NOK 10.1 billion in November, meaning a decrease of 1 percent in volume but an increase of 28 percent in value, compared to November last year.

Poland, the United States of America and France were the biggest markets during that month. The weakened Norwegian krone against the dollar and euro boosted the export value, while a strong demand growth and reduced supply from competitors also contributed, especially to the US market.

According to NSC, although November alone was a strong export month for salmon, there are reports from the markets of an unsettled and unclear situation related to the contract market for salmon in 2023. This erodes the predictability that Norwegian salmon has represented for importers, producers and retail customers.

Analysts add that home consumption of salmon is falling in Norway's most important markets, but has been compensated by more outside home meals. Consumers are observing a weakened purchasing power which could affect total salmon consumption negatively, in the long term.

TROUT

According to NSC, Norway exported 4 897 tonnes of trout worth NOK 454 million in November, which represented an increase of 7 percent (NOK 32 million), in terms of value compared to the eleventh month of last year, but the export volume sharply declined by 25 percent. The United States of America, Thailand and Lithuania were the top three markets for trout in the month, but Lithuania registered the largest increase in value, with an export value of NOK 50 million, up 1 886 percent, compared to the same month last year, and a volume 977 percent higher to 622 tonnes. According to data collected by NSC, Norwegian HOG fresh tout prices FOB of sales to EU markets reached NOK 76.71 at week 47, after a "rollercoaster" trend from week 42 onwards, but an important decline compared to NOK 97.46 from week 40.

SEABASS AND SEABREAM

Cultured seabass and seabream are not a classical festivity treat. Thus the downward trend in demand that started in September has continued into the end of the year, with volumes and prices of cultures seabass and seabream falling almost across the board. Price drops have been more pronounced for seabass, with small and medium fish now selling for less than they did in January of this year.

This is despite the much higher costs that farmers have faced, as well as inflation that has pushed up prices for most good and services. Conversely, as large seabass remain in short supply their prices are 70 percent above January levels. Prices for seabream are relatively stable, with medium sized fish selling for 12 percent less than they did in September.

While these trends are consistent with annual cyclical demand, high costs and inflation continue to exert abnormal pressure on the profitability of farms. In a recently released report, the Spanish Aquaculture Producers Association noted that while seabass and seabream production in the country is thought to have risen by around 10 percent in 2022, high costs are likely to stifle future growth in the sector as businesses struggle to remain viable.
