THIRTY-SECOND FAO REGIONAL CONFERENCE FOR LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN

Buenos Aires, Argentina, 26 to 30 March 2012

PROVISIONAL ANNOTATED AGENDA

7. Food and nutrition security: impacts, implications and opportunities for Latin America and the Caribbean, including Committee on World Food Security (CFS) consultations on mapping food security and nutrition actions and the Global Strategic Framework for Food Security and Nutrition

The document's objective will be to contribute towards highlighting those policy issues and global and regional regulations through which FAO can provide technical cooperation to the countries of the Region during the forthcoming biennium. These issues are particularly related to opportunities and threats deriving from the level and excessive volatility of food prices in the Region.

In order to achieve this, emphasis will be placed on the important contribution the Region can make towards production and world food trade, leading to a more active participation in directing the world food system. The new level of prices and the volatility of food which is expected over the forthcoming years are mainly due to: the growing demand for food derived from the policy promotion of bio-combustibles in developed countries, to the effects of climatic change and the operation of main future food commodity markets (maize, sorghum and wheat). This is an additional challenge in the fight against hunger. Even though these prices represent an opportunity for food exporting countries and producers, through an increase in inflation, they are a threat to food access for all the consumers of the Region, mainly the poorest and those most vulnerable to food insecurity.

In view of the main, global, regional and local challenges which food and nutritional security will have to face, the document will contribute towards highlighting the potential of FAO's technical cooperation in policy issues and regulations over the forthcoming years. Emphasis is placed on the
