2. Hermosillo City

In 1828, Hermosillo was renamed from Pitic, and categorized as a city, becoming an important commercial city with extensive trade with Europe. By the middle of the 20th century, the coast of Hermosillo began intensive agriculture by drilling the first deep wells for irrigation. Since then, the city has catapulted into an intense economic centre, much of which is related to the supply of inputs for agriculture-related activities.

Currently, the Hermosillo municipality is in its full stage of its development, thanks to aquaculture, agricultural, commercial, and industrial activities, and it is also a growing touristic city.

Hermosillo is located near the famous Kino Bay (Bahia de Kino), a fishing village where diving is one of the most common practices. Kino Bay attracts thousands of visitors every year for its various fishing and diving tournaments, and the diversity of aquatic species that can be found here.

In addition, the city has all the necessary tourist, cultural and entertainment infrastructure to receive global visitors and tourists.
