China-FAO South-South Cooperation: promoting inclusive and sustainable development

About the Side-Event

South-South Cooperation (SSC) under the FAO framework has gone through more than 20 years since FAO officially launched the Special Programme for Food Security (SPFS) in 1996. Over the past 20 years, FAO has coordinated the international community to explore effective ways to address food security threats in underdeveloped countries, which made important contributions to improving agricultural productivity and food security in developing countries. China, as a significant participant and active supporter of FAO SSC programme, has witnessed the burgeoning development of SSC with FAO and other partners. In addition of assisting the publicity of the conference, the side event aims to share achievements and experience and improve the worldwide understanding of FAO SSC programme, further to extend global SSC partnership, promote SSC and tripartite cooperation to implement the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development of the United Nations.

Background information

The SPFS was proposed by FAO in 1994 and recognized by the World Food Summit in 1996. It has developed into one of the important moves to achieve the UN Millennium Development Goals. Within the framework of the SPFS, FAO vigorously promotes SSC. Entering the new century, FAO SSC programme keeps evolving. The number of participating countries has increased rapidly and the effectiveness of cooperation has continued to emerge.

China is one of the earliest participants of the FAO SSC programme and is the first country to establish a strategic SSC alliance for SSC with FAO. China donated two phases of trust funds, a total of 80 million US dollars, to FAO to support the SSC in agriculture. By the end of May 2017, China has sent over 1000 experts and technicians to 26 countries and regions in Africa, Asia, the South Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean through FAO's SSC programmes, accounting for about 60 percent of all expatriates under the FAO SSC programme. They have made positive contributions to improving agricultural productivity and food security in developing countries.

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development of the United Nations has become the focus of global development since 2016. As the specialized agency responsible for global food and agriculture in the United Nations system, FAO plays a vital role in coordinating resources and supporting the achievement of sustainable development goals such as poverty and hunger eradication on a global scale. SSC will be one of the key tools of FAO. In recent years, FAO and China have carried out a series of exploration on strengthening SSC. These efforts include taking into account the different levels of development and capacity of different countries, and exploring regional and global projects to benefit more impoverished population through SSC. Meantime, FAO and China make great efforts to promote triangular cooperation with developed countries and other international organizations to expand partnerships and promote global sharing of agricultural expertise and knowledge.
