The paper deals with the specific form of transformation of desert soils under anthropogenic impact, changes in their patterns of morphogenetic characteristics and properties. The study of revealed regularities has made it possible to determine the direction of the natural recovery of disturbed soils in time and depending on the degree of violation.

Key words: anthropogenic impact, disturbed soils, recovery of soils.

By the nature of the environmental impact oil production is related to environmentally dangerous economic activities. Increasing of anthropogenic load on the soil during the construction of engineering structures and production of oil causes a reduction in the resource potential of the land. And transformation of the existing relief in the newly formed, man-made terrain is observed.

Texts of abstracts should be in accordance with the above regulations and in the attached file (file name should include the name of the first author in Latin letters, the number of the conference field and the word tezis, for example, Ivanov_1_tezis.doc.
