Japan‘s intervention for Item 5

- The important role of the CFS in advancing resilient and sustainable agriculture and food systems, as well as food security and nutrition, is recognized across other relevant multilateral processes. In this context, strengthening coherence and synergies with these processes, while promoting the broader uptake and application of CFS policy products, would be of great significance.
- At the same time, due consideration should be given to the diversity of countries' agricultural structures, stages of development, institutional frameworks and national priorities. Japan attaches importance to ensuring that CFS policy products are not intended to impose a one-size-fits-all approach but rather provide practical and flexible guidance that countries can adapt and apply according to their own circumstances and needs.
- Japan hopes that the effective uptake and implementation of CFS policy products will be further advanced and remains committed to engaging constructively in future discussions and efforts.
